

Roll for Initiative Poster Handout

Abi Morgan & Ginny Boehme

How to Interact with this Poster

We designed this poster to be almost like a game. As you move through the game board, you will encounter different outcomes based on real scenarios we faced in the course of planning our game night programs between 2017-2020. Along the way, you will also find data and takeaways from our events, with an emphasis on how we have worked with students. We encourage you to play the game and then go back and read through all the scenarios.

Symbol Key

Orange circles - data from our own events

Blue boxes - tips and ideas for facilitating a library game night

Poster Text

Instructions

At each game space, flip a coin to find out how your library game night program develops. In the bonus round, if your last name starts with A-L, choose Option 1. If your last name starts with M-Z, choose Option 2.

1 - Start

Board games have increased in popularity in the last few years (Toy Industry Association), and your library wants to take advantage of this unique outreach program that will allow you to partner with student groups.

2 - Funding

Board game collections are expensive to build, and you also want to provide refreshments for your attendees. How will you pay for your library game night program?

- Heads: Funding only comes from internal library funding
- Tails: Awarded extra funds from your campus student activities office

Our data - Working with student organizations has been the key for successfully receiving funding from external campus partners. Our student activities office, MAP, is student-run and gives priority funding to groups that partner together. We also worked closely with student organizations who applied for funding to be applied to our combined events. See Figure 1 for funding comparisons across all of our library game nights.

Tips on Seeking Funding:

- Student activity and alumni relations offices are great campus resources. They often have program funding for campus partners.
- GAMERT grants are available for up to $500.
- Reach out to game publishers for free or reduced games.

[Free Space] Marketing

- Flyers - use staff printing privileges to cut down on costs
- Email - capture emails at each event with a sign in sheet, then use to promote future events
- Social media - tap student groups to post on their social media channels
- Other signs - campus digital displays, A-Frame signs outside library amplify event

3 - Student Engagement

Your game nights are off to a great start! You are hoping to get more input from student groups on campus to keep the momentum going.

- Heads: Students respond to your emails and partner with you
- Tails: Students are busy and never respond to your emails

Our data

- Student Led Events
 - Extra Life 24-hour fundraiser for children's hospitals
 - Star Wars-themed game day
 - Traditional Mexican games for Hispanic Heritage Month
- Partner Student Organizations
 - Top row: Miami University eSports Club, Strategy Gaming Club, Role Playing Guild
 - Middle row: UNIDOS, Society of Physics Students, Miami Game Design Club
 - Bottom row: Miami Activities and Programming, League of Geeks

Tips on Leadership Roles for Students

- Planning event
- Applying for funding
- Marketing
- Running the event on the day
- Teaching games

4 - Space Flexibility

How much space can you devote to your game nights?

- Heads: Can't re-configure space or hours
- Tails: Can hold game nights after hours and move furniture around

Our data - After holding 23 library game nights, we have developed a strong preference for holding the events after-hours. If that is not possible, we separate our event as much as possible from dedicated quiet study space. See Figure 2 for total attendance by semester.

Tips on Utilizing Your Space

- Look for the least disruptive area to accommodate students who still need to use the library for studying or to access books.
- Clearly mark off your gaming space with signs.

STOP

Find the scenario that matches your coin flips.

Bonus Round

You have collected and analyzed feedback from your attendees and now you need to use it to make your program even better.

Option 1 - More food! More Games!

Ask for specific suggestions in your survey for different types of food and titles of games. Based on feedback we received, we added more healthy food options. We also added packs of cards and common games like checkers, chess, Uno, Battleship, Clue, and Jenga to our game collection for players who wanted fewer strategy games and to spend less time learning new game rules.

Option 2 - More community!

Find student groups or other staff to teach novice players new games. Be open to partnerships with student groups outside of traditional gaming clubs. Open game nights to your entire campus community, not just students. By empowering students to take over some of the planning and event running, game nights become less of a library-only event and more of a university-wide event.

Scenario Texts

Match your coin flips to the scenarios below.

Heads, Heads, Heads:

There's not much in the way of funding, but you are able to work with the local pizza place to get a great deal. One of the student gaming groups on campus offers to help market the event and encourage its members to attend and teach some games. You have to host the event during normal library hours, but some of the students decide to take a study break for some free food and games. The more the merrier!

Heads, Heads, Tails:

You don't have much in the way of funding, but you can get a ton of bulk snacks for pretty cheap. Your event is after normal library hours, so you don't have to worry about possible disruptions to students. You get some interest from some student groups in helping to plan and participate, and they are able to get their members to bring in some games of their own to teach attendees to play. Their help also means your staff can take a break from running the event to play some games as well, and everyone has a great time!

Heads, Tails, Heads:

It's not ideal, but you are resourceful. You have some games from the library collection you can bring out, and you have some attendees who are bringing their own. You don't have much funding, but you have great staff to help you put together a homemade taco bar. You have to host the event during normal library hours, and so some students may be a little annoyed at the disruption to their studying, but others are enticed to take a break and join in the fun!

Heads, Tails, Tails:

You don't have much funding to buy food or games, so you need to get creative. You have a small games collection that you can bring out for attendees to play, or you can invite attendees to bring their own. As for food, you'd be amazed at how cheap bulk snacks can be. Since your space is flexible and you don't need to worry about disturbing any studying, you can arrange the furniture however works best. It all requires a little extra effort from your staff, but you manage to pull off a great board game night!

Tails, Heads, Heads:

A couple of student groups reach out to you to ask if they can partner with you for a big gaming event. An outside funding organization decides to award you extra funding for partnering with the students. You are able to order some really great catering for the event, which draws some good foot traffic. You do have to plan around some studying, but since the student groups are trying to raise funds for charity, it works out well for everyone!

Tails, Heads, Tails:

Everything is coming up roses for you this time! You have been awarded funding from two different outside groups, you have a student organization reaching out to you to ask if they can help host, and you have complete control over the event space. You order lots of good food, several new games, and you are able to spread out without having to worry about disrupting any study time. Hooray!

Tails, Tails, Heads:

You were awarded a good chunk of additional funding, and you decide to use it primarily to buy some big games for your collection and some high-end items for a prize drawing during the event. You don't have any student groups to partner with this time, but you're able to heavily market the event on your own. The event draws the attention of many of the students who may not have initially planned on participating, and you are able to draw a large gathering of gamers. Your event is a smashing success!

Tails, Tails, Tails:

Your request for outside funding was approved and you have more funding than you can shake a stick at. What to do? Order catering and lots of prizes, of course! You are also able to use some of the funds to purchase some new games, as well as some ad space in the campus newspaper and on screens in the student center. Your event is after-hours and you don't have to worry about disturbing any studying students, so you can take up however much space you like!

Images and Figures

Figure 1 - Funding

For a while when we first started, our library administration did not fully understand our desire for hosting social events without any academic focus, and so did not offer much in the way of funding for our monthly events. We were stretched pretty thin, but we managed to at least offer some snacks and drinks for our attendees. After a couple of semesters, our attendance numbers grew enough that the value of hosting these events became obvious, and we were able to secure a higher level of library funding to supplement the additional funds we were able to receive through our student activities office.

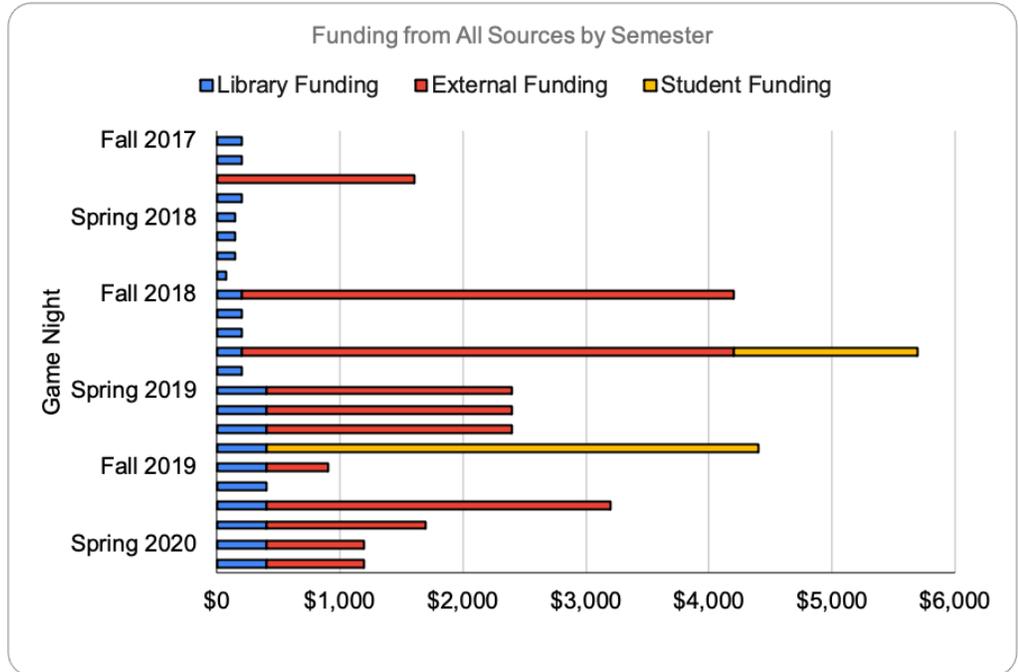

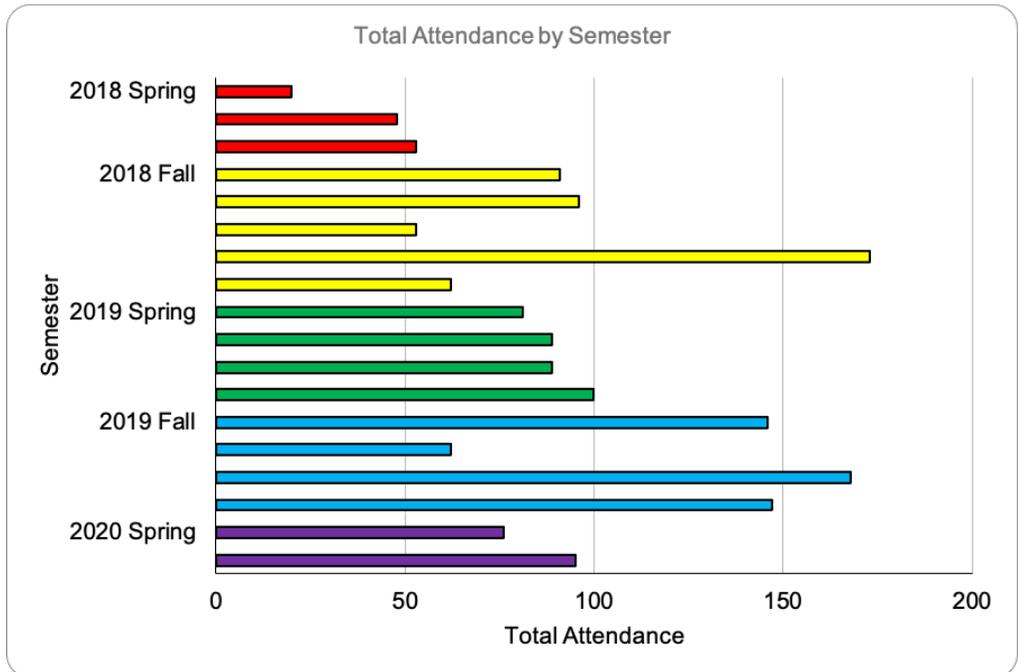

Figure 2 - Attendance

We do not have exact attendance numbers for any of our Fall 2017 events and one event in Spring 2018, but they are similar to what we saw at the rest of the Spring 2018 events. We managed to attract a large following of dedicated attendees who appeared at most of our events every semester, and relied on flyers and other marketing strategies to continually attract new faces as well.

Works Cited

Toy Industry Association. "Game and puzzle retail sales in the United States from 2011 to 2020 (in billion U.S. dollars)." Chart. March 3, 2021. Statista. Accessed March 22, 2021.

<https://www.statista.com/statistics/247409/toy-sales-in-the-us--games-and-puzzles/>

Image Credits

Alligator - Designed by Freepik

Flaming hoop - <https://pngio.com/images/png-a84226.html>

Dice figures © Sean Poppe. Used with permission

Thanks and Acknowledgements

The Library Gaming Knights planning committee members past and present:

Heather Barbour, Cara Calabrese, Lori Chapin, Eric Johnson, Sean Poppe, Aidyn Scott, Elizabeth Staarman, Thomas Tully, Eric Weaver, John Williams, Jerry Yarnetsky

Contact Information

Abi Morgan: morgan55@miamioh.edu

Ginny Boehme: boehmemv@miamioh.edu

<https://libguides.lib.miamioh.edu/board-games>